

The following map is based on research conducted by The Marshall Project and shows the percentage of prisoners in each state who are there solely for violating parole.

Source: Marshall Project Survey of State Corrections Departments. Note: Alaska and Maine included a small number of prisoners who violated the terms of their probation, not parole, in their totals. Georgia included some inmates who committed a parole violation that involved a new crime